Human bones were found at a business park in Lelystad at the end of May. After investigation it appears that these are the remains of Alex van Cittert. The Amsterdammer was reported missing 24 years ago. His missing person became a cold case after it was never solved. The police take into account that van Cittert was killed by a crime.

At the end of May, excavation work was being carried out at a producer of wooden pallets in Lelystad. According to the Central Netherlands police, this was "just a company that was working there". When digging, a soil with several bones was found underground. The police investigated there for days and reported two weeks later that the remains were human remains.

Van Cittert was reported missing in February 1999. The missing person report stated that there was a suspicion that he had gone abroad. The Central Netherlands police will investigate the case further in collaboration with the Amsterdam unit and find out how the man died.
