The remains found at Arquino They are Professor Fraquelli

SONDRIO seems very close to the yellow solution of the discovery of human remains in the woods above Arquino. The skull and other bone fragments belong to Gianni Fraquelli, Sondrio professor of philosophy who died on May 28, 1997.

Given the delicacy of the matter, the investigators maintain strict secrecy about the investigation. The teacher's relatives, however, have already been alerted. Besides the remains, even the identity card shreds were found on which you could read quite clearly the name of Fraquelli.

Just out of respect, however, investigators of the police are conducting the investigations on bone fragments, so that we can establish with certainty the correspondence with the given name in the recovered document. This is an absolutely necessary precaution, of course, even if the evidence already in the possession of the investigators is certain.
